“ I worked with Martha for many years at Webster Electric. My special memory is when the guys in the office decided to buy her a winter coat for Christmas. One of the sale men asked me to go with him to Boston store and try on coats as we were about the same size. Of course, I went. The only rule we had to follow was "Make sure it wasn't black, or brown, or gray, (as that is what she tended to wear) we want a bright color." So we picked out a beautiful scarlet red winter coat. She was in tears when she opened it. It was beyond anything she had dreamed of. That memory makes me smile.

She was my grandmother. She did not like children and was very mean to me. Even though thats the case, she was my grandmother and she died a slow misearble of dementia. I cared about her and now she is gone. Its a tough world we live in, but we all have to move on.
